

Financial Literacy

lays the foundation for closing the income and wealth gaps that permeate American society. School-based financial education helps to level the playing field for those students whose families aren't able to provide an introduction to money management at home. But...

Only 65% of the Nation's public school districts offer financial education at the high school level. This drops to 9% of the middle schools and 7% of the elementary schools.

Urban school districts are less likely to offer financial education than their rural and suburban counterparts.

Financial Education

is offered more often in school districts where the majority race is white.

Financial Education

is offered more often in school districts where families have a higher than average income.

We Can Do Better... Can You Help?

Statistics from the Baseline Survey conducted on behalf of the Jump$TART Coalition by the National Endowment for Financial Education for the 2019 launch of #CheckYourSchool.

info@jumpstart.org • donate@jumpstart.org • www.jumpstart.org • 202.846.6780